Logline-

In the driest desert on earth, the Atacama in northern Chile, a community fights for their right to survive in the face of lithium mining which is draining the water underneath their feet; all for false promises of saving the planet.

Synopsis-

In the face of devastating climate change impacts, the world has turned to green technology and electric vehicles to save the planet. But in the high desert of northern Chile and Argentina, indigenous communities fight for their survival as the water beneath their feet is drained to produce the lithium required for this green-tech revolution. How will the world adapt without sacrificing ecosystems and people's lives in the process?
